

Feature films are, by definition, fictionalised story films. The representation of the ills of a society is often unavoidable in a portrayal seeking to drive home a larger message.

Freedom to produce and exhibit films comes under the domain of 'freedom of speech and expression'. A film-maker has, therefore, the freedom to choose the names for the characters in his films, subject, of course, to the reasonable restrictions mentioned in the Constitution.

Government have issued guidelines to the Central Board of Film Certification under Section 5B (2) of the Cinematograph Act, 1952 for certification of films. According to guideline 2(xii), while examining films for certification, the Board shall, inter alia, ensure that visuals or words contemptuous of racial, religious or other groups are not presented. Scenes considered by the Board as objectionable in terms of the guidelines are deleted from films before certification.

In May 1996 the Central Board of Film Certification has written to all the film producers' associations drawing attention to the above guideline and requesting them to keep in mind the complaint from the Christian community inter alia, while making films.
