28 MAY 1956

Shri Sadhan Gupta (Calcutta South-East): May I have a clarification? As a result of this Treaty will the people of Pondicherry be able to participate in the next general elections as citizens of India? Secondly, what would be the position of Pondicherry in the scheme of States reorganisation? Has any thought been given to that?

Shri Jawaharial Nehru: Firstly, these have to be ratified before they take effect. It may be that the ratification takes place in a month or a few weeks. After that, Pondicherry and other establishments will continue their separate existence in accordance with the Treaty itself and also in accordance with our assurance given to them. We cannot make a change in their status without their own consent—that is, the consent of the people. Therefore, it is not proposed to make any change at this stage. They will continue separately and not be absorbed or merged into any other State. I am talking about the major parts or territories. What exactly will be done to others, I cannot say,—maybe some small part and it is difficult to keep that part. As for the type of Government that may be established there, that is a matter for separate consideration.

Shri Gaogii (Poona Central): May I ask one question? Apart from the local administration which may be determined later on, what about the representation of areas in the Lok Sabha?

Shri Jawaharlal Nehru: These are matters which certainly should be considered. From the population point of view, they are relatively small areas, but, nevertheless, of certain importance. What the hon. Member said deserves consideration.
